142 before, that of the mammary gland proper, on the approach of puberty, and is more obvious then, than after the gland has acquired its full rotundity. After marriage, the areola gradually sinks, leaving the nipple standing out prominently in its centre.

128 In treating of the manners and customs of these people, I shall include the three tribes of Tiribi, Bri-bri, and Cabecar as one, and shall only mention them separately where points of difference occur. First in the order comes the birth of the young savage.

789 All the world, or rather all the ignorant world, and even a part of that 827 which considers itself reasonably enlightened, entertains a belief in the 843 influence on the child, of certain impressions made on the mother during pregnancy. Doubtless the general mental state of the mother has an influence on her progeny. But the belief exists among these Indians, in its full force, that the sight of certain objects by the mother will influence her child physically. They go further. The mother is given to wearing certain charms to that end. The eyes of the fish hawk give the future fisher the power to see his prey beneath the water; the teeth of the tiger (also worn by both sexes for purely ornamental purposes), when used as an amulet makes the future hunter swift and strong in the chase; the hairs of a horse make him strong to carry loads, and a piece of cotton pushed inside of her girdle by a white man, is certain to make the child of a lighter complexion.

844 When the time of parturition approaches, the father goes into the woods
[343] and builds a little shed, at a safe distance from the house. To this the woman retires as soon as she feels the labor pains coming on. Here, alone and unassisted, she brings forth her young. Difficult delivery is as rare as among the lower animals. As soon as the delivery is effected, the mother of the woman, if present, and in her absence, some other old woman approaches the mother and, with great circumspection to avoid the defilement of ba-ku-ru', of which I shall speak further on, places within her reach a piece of wild cane, so split as to make a rude knife. The mother ties the umbilical cord and severs it with this knife. No other kind is permitted. She is also supplied in the same manner with some tepid water in a folded plantain leaf, in which she washes the child. She then collects the after-birth, &c., and buries it, after which she goes to the nearest water and bathes herself. An awa, or medicine man then ap-
846 pears on the scene. He causes the mother to theoretically wash herself again, by dipping her fingers into a calabash of water, which he forthwith drinks. He then lights a pipe of tobacco, blowing the smoke over her. He then purifies himself by washing his hands, after which, and not before, all are permitted to return to the house. The recovery of the mother is so prompt that it may be more properly said, she has nothing to recover from. I have seen a young mother, with her first child not yet a week old, attending to her ordinary duties as if nothing had happened.
